stunning flames within minutes, not hours. • AeFlame is not merely a static template to render flames. It is so much more. It will allow you to design the fractal, and the way it is rendered. • Produces incredibly detailed layers. • You can edit the structure, add physics, rotate the layers, use several lens flares, duplicate layers, adjust the geometry. You can change the flames, use layers from the template. It is incredibly easy to use and you can create astonishing results in a matter of minutes. •

Ideal for graphic artists and video editors. • It is capable of producing stunning, realistic flames in less than two minutes. • Rendered on 16 layers (not just 4 layers as standard in AE) so that you can easily adjust the fractal and make it look as though it is a real flame in your own composition. • No plugins required. • No advanced design required, just set your scene and render. • Includes pre-rendered tutorials so that you can get the hang of AeFlame quickly. • You can render the flame on a template

Janita Kanaly CHICAGO (Reuters)

- Police on Wednesday released more information on the execution-style slaying of an 11-year-old boy that underscored the dangers of Chicago's violence and spawned a national debate over police tactics. The shooting, which Chicago's top prosecutor said was the first of its kind in the city since the late 1960s, has led police to change their stance on such deaths as a way of deterring similar crimes. It also added to the pressure on Chicago Mayor Rahm Emanuel, who faces an election in February, to curb crime in his third and final term. The assailant, a 15-year-old Chicago student who is not a suspect in the shooting, was charged with murder, said Chicago Police spokesman Anthony Guglielmi. He said a prosecutor would formally charge the teen, who had been held in juvenile detention since the killing, by Wednesday evening. Police say the victim, Nathaniel Owens, was shot by the suspect, who had followed him from school to a northwest neighborhood after he had been pulled out of class for fighting. Owens' father, Henry Owens, told a news conference the boy had been sitting on a stoop waiting for a bus when he and his mother were attacked in their front yard by a gang of about six teenagers. "He didn't have to fight them. He didn't have to run," Henry Owens said. Police said the teenagers were following Nathaniel when they pulled out a gun and fired six shots into his body and his mother's face as they approached them. The murder weapon was recovered at the scene and Henry Owens said his son had been looking for a gun to protect himself after seeing several people on the street fighting. "I tried to get him to stop doing that. He didn't listen. I told him, 'Come on, man. You don't have to do that. Let's walk home. Let's get on the bus,'" he said.

HIGHLIGHTS OF CASE Chicago Police Superintendent Garry McCarthy told reporters the incident was "disturbing" and called for more reform
